GENERAL GUIDELINES AND INFORMATION

Planting Instructions

- See our variety specific picture tags or the Gardener's Confidence® Collection website for instructions on each plant.

Container Gardening for Northern Climates

- If colder than Zone 6, try container planting with hydrangeas, gardenias and dwarf crapemyrtles. Simply bring the container into the garage or basement during the cold months allowing the plant to go dormant during the winter. Keep moderately moist but well drained during this period (just enough to keep the roots semi-moist). Place the container outside again when temperatures rise above freezing and your plant will be ready for new spring growth.

USDA Zones

- As a valuable tool for all gardeners across the country, the USDA Plant Hardiness Zone has specific geographic zones based on average annual temperature. This map divides North America into 11 separate zones; each zone is 10° F warmer (or colder) in an average winter than the adjacent zone. An interactive map of the USDA Zone map may be accessed on-line on the Gardener's Confidence® Collection website.

CRAPEMYRTLES - MID-SIZE - The Barnyard Series

These cheerful crapemyrtles give you a stress free garden in the heat of summer. While some plants struggle to thrive in high temperatures, the new Barnyard Mid-Size Crapemyrtles will be ready to shine. With modest heights from 6-10' and striking colors, these low maintenance, drought tolerant shrubs add character minus the tedious work that comes along with many plant varieties.
